INTRODUCTION

Blackberries & Convulvulus

Hedgerows have become a vital part of the ecological fabric at White House Farm. Over the past 30 years, and especially during the last decade, we have been replanting hedges and testing out different ways of making them thicker and more welcoming, richer in wildlife. It is a woolly jumper effect : the more biodiverse and thicker the hedges, the more wildlife they welcome – plants, invertebrates, small mammals and birds.

Over the past few years we have been testing a variety of different management strategies to see which benefit wildlife most – or which combinations of interventions work best. These include : hedge laying; double-planting new and old hedges; hedgerows with wildflower strips alongside; hedges with scrub and mown paths alongside; hedges left to grow tall; and hedges mown annually.

The Hedge Residency is being created as a multi-year collaborative project, inviting Jane Wormell to visit the farm through the seasons over 3-4 years and explore the different types of hedgerow and their wildlife through her paintings. This Collection provides an introduction to her work.
